

A Page in the Book of Jake's Life

Have you ever thought about how best-selling author, Jake E, came to be the national treasure he is today? Who inspired him? What did he enjoy doing? Well everything is answered in this biography.

On the 11th of April 2007, Jake was born in Leeds, Yorkshire. He was delivered at the LGI (Leeds General Infirmary). His mother and father - Kerry and Mark- were over the moon when he arrived safely: at this point they were unaware that they were witnessing the first moments of an extraordinary life.

Kerry was a manager at Santander until Jake came along, as she couldn't work full time with a baby so she now opens accounts for more wealthy customers. Mark, on the other hand, worked at Arla until Jake was nine when he went to work for a company called Mc Brides to be a mechanic. When he was 2, Jake welcomed a baby sister to the family home, whose name was Holly.

As a child, Jake had many friends including: Jamie (well known for creating Jambos), Eddie, Millie and Jack. His favourite subject in primary school was maths although that changed as he progressed into high school. One of his passions was reading. He loved books such as: The Maze Runner and Harry Potter. One of his main inspirations though was David Baddiel (well known for writing the likes of 'The Person Controller' and 'The Parent Agency') because of his great imagination. Jake also rather enjoyed David Walliams. His main hobbies at the time were mainly football and gaming.

When Jake was eleven, he enrolled at Garforth Academy. He passed his maths and English GCSEs with flying colours at the age of 16. When he was considering his university, Jake received a place at Oxford and accepted it without a second thought.

With a degree in English under his belt, Jake published his first book – 'The Virus' – which became 3rd on the bestselling book chart in 2027. At first, Jake started to write horror novels but then switched to children's literature in 2029. His first few children's books didn't go down' so well with the public, but then he struck gold with 'Jamie Boy' as it become an instant number one and won his first Roald Dahl funny prize. This breakthrough was just the start for Jake, as he went on to win a further 3 Roald Dahl funny prizes and 4 bestsellers. He got these prizes on an astonishing 8 books! Some of these include: 'Agent Pritt', 'Barry Washer and the Broken-Down Washing Machine' and 'Secret Sam Sandwich'.

Jake currently lives in 7 Mayfair with a wife and two children (a boy and a girl) just like his dad did. His son – David – is named in memory of Jakes granddad, David. His daughter – Katherine – is named in memory of Jakes Auntie Katherine who died when she was 19. On one hand, David loved football; on the other hand, Katherine loved gymnastics. Michelle Van Luz – who was Jakes wife and best friend – changed her name to Elmer when she married Jake in 2035: 8 years after he burst onto the literary scene.

Throughout his whole career so far, Jake published 73 books in 20 years. Nowadays, he is looked up to as being an international great in the world of writing. There is no doubt about the fact, he is, most definitely, one of the best literary heroes of all time.

Drama Queen - the Biography of Emma

At 6:14am on the 20th December 2006, Emma was born in the Leeds General Infirmary. Born 11 days early, Emma has always been small for her age. By 9:00am that morning, Helen and Jason arrived at their home in Leeds with their blue-eyed, blonde-haired baby girl. At this point, how would they have known that they were holding a future star in their arms?

Emma's parents worked for the NHS and Morrisons office, making enough money for their move to Kippax. Emma was nearly three when she became a big sister to Gracie and had just started at Nursery School. She attended that school for a year before transferring to a primary school on the outskirts of Leeds. This is when she met Rosie; they were best friends until year four. This is only because Emma met Lily, who would be her best friend for a very long time. Lily and Emma were still best friends in year six, but this is when Emma met Connor - her future husband.

At the end of her time in Primary school, Emma moved up into High School where she developed a love of acting. She had the main part in every play; all the drama teachers knew her and she had watched some inspiring films. By the time her GCSEs came, Emma had been in quite a few movies. She received A*s in English, drama, art and maths.

Emma moved on to go to Oxford University where she earned her degree in drama, which enabled her to be a famous actress. She stayed there for two years before graduating in 2027 to start a family.

Emma and Connor were married in 2028 and had their first child- Hermione- in 2029. At this point, they moved to Devon so that Emma could continue her career in acting. At the age of 24, Emma and Connor had their second child-Harry- in 2031. Hermione was now starting at a local nursery school. Connor was urging Emma to audition for more roles in movies. After the birth of their third and final child-Ron- in 2035, the family moved to London to send Hermione to a more successful school where she would soon learn to love acting too and Harry to a more educational nursery. The main reason they moved was to enable Emma to continue her acting career.

Emma will be remembered because of the films that she starred in and also by the book that she wrote: My Career in Acting. Her closer friends will remember her because of her funny and imaginative personality. Her family will no doubt be inspiring her to go further in her successful career.

The Animated Life of Beth

On the 27th of July, 2007 at 11:07pm, Elizabeth was born. Beth's parents are Joanne and Mike (she also has a sister called Abbie). Beth was a little miracle because her parents were told they couldn't have any children.

Beth had a happy childhood, most of it consisting of Disney cartoons and pure imagination. Beth's favourite hobby was drawing, which inspired her to be an animator although her drawings were not... top-notch.

When Beth came into year 5, she met a new group of friends. Her best friend (Nina) taught her how to draw better. Then that was it, she had decided to become an animator.

The college of her choice was Ringling Art and Design School. It was there, she then pursued her dream and became an animator for Pixar. Not only was she animating a series, she was also asked if she wanted to be a voice actress for some of her shows.

Because Beth's sister was an actress, she had frequent visits to her performances. This boosted her imagination even more. So, running out of ideas was never an issue. One of her sister's shows especially inspired her, so she decided to make an animation based on it. It took many months but she finally made it. A few months after Beth published the animation it started to become slowly more and more popular. This was just the beginning of her rise to fame.

Beth has since made multiple animations that have built her career. Because she was always animating, it was obvious she wasn't in a relationship. One of her most famous animations was called "7". It was based on her life (named '7' because most of her birth timing/dates is a seven). Born on the 27th of the 7th month, 2007, at 11:07 and her weight was 7 pound. Some believed it was fake and just making it up for fame; others knew it was real and enjoyed every minute of it.

Beth (who has now created her own company) is still animating to this day and hopes people will enjoy her animations for years to come.

The Happy World of Harry-Bo

Have you ever wondered who created the sour, tingly Harrybo Tangfastics? Well, the answer is in the name! Harry-bo Tang-fastics. He successfully joined the Haribo Company and changed every product with a secret ingredient. And of course, he became the Chief Executive and re-named the products to Harrybo Tangfastics! Now, he is the most successful confectionery businessman in England! His success may have seemed easy to achieve, but I can assure you, it wasn't!

In the middle of the night, in December 2006, Harry was born at St. James Hospital (Leeds). However, during the process, he was stuck and was needed to be pulled out, using forceps. He was taken to his 4-bedroom house in a suburb of Leeds and met his brother. During his early years, he was considered as "the cutest, brown-eyed baby." The parents (Helen and George) had no idea that a future billionaire was held in their arms.

Helen (the mother) worked for Lloyds Bank in the complaints sector. Harry's father (George) worked for Amazon and would occasionally help out in his brother's restaurant. They both owned and worked in a takeaway.

Eventually, it was time for Harry to go to school. He found it difficult and exhausting but his friends: Jamie , Eddie , Jake and Jack , helped him struggle through. Harry's hobby was drawing: he didn't have many hobbies as he was addicted to sweets and electronics. Near the age of 6, his teeth were removed and he cried in agony every time he moved his mouth.

He slowly progressed through school and was in high school. He found it even worse but his friends were there to support him. After receiving a GCSE in Food Economics and Maths, Harry began searching for a university that would accept him. Unfortunately, all the applications were declined so he decided to go to sixth-form.

2 years later, he passed his A-levels and was accepted into Leeds University. Many months passed by and Harry was doing exceptionally well (mainly focusing on Food Ec, Maths and English). When he was 24, he graduated with 3 degrees: Food Ec, Maths and Chemistry! Harry had no idea what the future held for him.

A stroke of luck came his way as he was accepted to work in the Haribo Factory. For 10 years, he worked there until he was promoted. This happened as Harry had been conducting experiments to improve the quality and the taste of the sweets, which was successful and therefore, he was promoted to the manager of the factory.

After a year of hard work, he improved the taste of the Haribos and the sales began to increase immensely. It was extremely satisfying for Harry as he was finally being recognised for his hard work and at the age of 37, he became the Chief Executive.

From 2043-2048, Harry has been one of the most successful confectionery businessmen in England. Harrybo Tangfastics will always remind sweet-lovers of Harry T.

The Life of a Smart Repairer

Jack was born on the twenty-second of March 2007 at St James Hospital in Leeds. Jack was delivered to the world on a frosty, freezing, rainy Wednesday.

Little did his parents [Anne and Neil] know they were holding a future smart repairer in their arms. They took him to their home in Leeds where he would get all the love and attention he deserved. Born to be the baby boy of the family: in fact he was the youngest person in the family. The only annoying thing was that he never stopped crying. Jack had enormous blue eyes, which stared at everything. He was given a Tigger toy, which bounced up and down and sang an educational song. In the three-bedroom, one-bathroom house Jack never stopped crying. Every two-minutes family were turning up and making it awkward for the neighbours to get in and out of their driveways.

When Jack was a child, [age 3] he started school in September 2011 at Primary School. He always hated school and never wanted to go. By 2018 he started high school at Garforth Academy. Jack preferred high school to primary as in the last few years you got to choose the subjects you wanted to do and the staff treated you more like an adult. He had always chosen subjects you would do to become a carpenter or plumber. His least-favourite subject he had to do was maths: although he was good at it he hated every minute of it. He always was good with computers because his Mum taught him all of the tips and tricks. He even managed to help the teachers when they didn't know how to do things. He even flew through his exams.

When Jack was an adult, he lived near his family in Killingbeck, they were: his sister; his nieces; his uncle and his Grandad Ray who lived locally. Each evening, [Monday to Friday] he would do his daily shop at Asda on his way home from work. There was only one thing he hated about where he lived which was the fact that all of the estate's roads were ruined and bumpy. He was friends with most of the people on the estate but there were the odd ones he didn't get on with. About twice a month, he would go to his sister's house or vice versa. Jack always preferred Saturdays to any other day of the week. At home [strangely enough] he loved vacuuming so he drove the neighbours mad. The only two people in his family he didn't see much of were his Grandma and Grandad who lived in Scotland.

Jack's career began with his Dad at Harjass Motors in Hunslet. His Dad's boss was named Paul and was a Sikh. Jack soon got to grips with solvent paint, which was easier than water based [which his Dad used to use]. Even though, Jack was an apprentice he was painting and repairing: VWs, Audis, Mercedes and many other top-notch cars.

Jack loved buffing and flattening which was handy for his Dad as he struggled to buff as it made his fingers and hands ache. Jack only found silicones annoying as it looked like specs of dirt in fresh paint. His Dad was enjoying having Jack there despite having to share his oven. His jobs were brilliant.

Jack was on a roll [although inside he was always worrying about whether his customers would be happy with the job. At times, they wanted to push the price as low as possible. Once his Dad encountered an eighty-year-old lady, who was really pleased with her car and was cuddling and crying.

When Jack ran out of supplies, he made a list, which usually contained: buffing pads; compound, primer and sanding disks. Sadly, it cost Paul a fortune. His supplier was called Fleet Factors, which was at the other end of the industrial estate. Harjass was on Pym Street and Fleet was on the main road at the other end of the estate. It was on the way to Crown Point where Currys PC World and many other shops were located. It was about a thirty-minute drive from his house in Killingbeck to Harjass Motors. Many people would say that was a long way but to Jack it was nothing.

In 2030, Jack went on to work at Bentley's Body Shop where he was repairing and painting cars worth over £200,000. This meant his paint had to be spot on each time, first time as the company could not afford to employ a painter that's not much good. Luckily for Jack, he has had some of the best training. Bentley already had on painter but he wasn't as good as Jack. They were orringanly were going to replace repairers with robots to save money but to keep the warranty he had to keep it hand-built. He stayed at Bentley until he became a pensioner.

Jack will be remembered for his great determination to get things done and his worry-free lifestyle as no-one wants to be worrying all of the time.

The Story of Sam.

A Biography of Sam

Sam was born in 2007 in the General Leeds Hospital on June 19th in Britain on a bright sunny day. His family would have never guessed a famous author was in their hands. His parents were a lovely couple (Sarah Abdullah and Abah Abdullah). His dad's job was to be an elephant keeper and his mom was unemployed. His dad lived in Malaysia and only visited Sam once a year. Often, this made him sad.

The boy hated his first day of school at Green Lane Primary Academy (GLPA), but eventually came to like it. He loved learning about Space and writing stories. He loved playing with his dog Rudy. Rudy was playful, but vicious when she saw other people or dogs. Unfortunately, Rudy passed away when Sam was 15. He did well in writing and English but always got confused when learning French, Spanish and German. GLPA inspired him to write more stories. When he went to High School, he found the homework rather hard, but excelled at writing and English, getting straight A+'s. He went to after-school clubs to increase the potential of his writing skills, and never skipped class thinking he would miss out on writing. When Sam studied maths, he was able to make an educational math guide-book to help his classmates. This made him extremely popular; he soon rose to be one of the best writers in the whole school. Sam made many friends. After passing all his classes apart from German and French, he started going to college to study more about writing and loved coming home to write books for the family. He realised that graduation was very important to get a job with a high salary so he spent most of his time studying other subjects instead of writing.

After his mom became an artist, she started illustrating his books. This inspired him, and afterwards Sam wrote his first public book, named "The Fool." Even though the book got 2,000 copies, he was barely recognisable and almost ended his career when he found out that other authors had written books with over 300 million copies. Sam sprung up with imagination and wrote another book that shot off his career with a head-start. He started being recognised and made a fortune. After that, he was a writing machine! He wrote a hybrid of an auto-biography and a story which was extremely popular.

As he was now in college, Sam had a wide span of free time and was able to write a 5-book series that would be his most popular books for a long time. After finishing the first, he was spotted in public and signed many autographs. After the second, he was invited to help write one of the most famous books written by the Number.1 author in the world. When producing the third and fourth books, film companies started making movies about his books. And after the finale, he was the best author in Europe. When Sarah illustrated his books, he was one of the best. At an age of 37, he wrote many more books to welcome him to the 11th best spot in author history. After being inspired by his fans, he wrote some of his best books selling over 13 million copies. His only competitor now, was an old ally, and a new enemy: Louis Cracker. The N.1 author.

When he was 40, Sam finished a final book introducing his best memories of life. It was a giant hit, and the copies sold were well into the hundreds of millions. After Sarah illustrated the book, Sam was announced as the best author in the world.

He lived a peaceful life, until the age of 68, when he suffered a heart attack in his own home and died. Sam will always be remembered, as he inspired many children to write stories and become great authors themselves, and he is now at peace in a better place.
